THE ALLAGASH ABDUCTIONS

by Marge Myers, Secretary

At the February 13, 1994 UFO Study Group Meeting, member Rick-Karr gave an excellent and interesting report on Raymond E. Fowler's book, The Allagash Abductions. Fowler was born in Salem, MA in 1933. He received a BA degree from Gordon College of Liberal Arts. His career includes service with the USAF Security Service and with GTE Strategic Systems Division. He retired early as a task manager and senior planner involved with major weapons systems development. His contributions to ufology are respected by UFO researchers throughout the world, and his investigative reports have been published in congressional hearings, military publications, newspapers, magazines and professional journals in the U.S.A. and abroad. Fowler currently serves as national director of investigations on the board of directors of MUFON (Mutual UFO Network).

In May 1988 Fowler was hosting the annual PSI Symposium, which was centered on UFO's. As Karr states, little did Fowler know that another unique abduction case awaited him in the auditorium. It would be the indisputable evidence that UFO abductions are real!

The focus of The Allagash Abductions is on four men, Jim and Jack Weiner (the twins), Chuck Rak and Charlie Foltz. Chuck made the arrangements for the canoe trip on the Allagash Waterway, and when the regular fourth member of the group was unable to make the trip, Charlie was asked to come along. The four men along with other campers were witness to a fireball in the sky. Thinking it probably was just a star, Jim took out his binoculars and soon discovered it was not a star but rather an unidentifiable object of some kind a few miles away, about 200 feet above the treetops. For a few seconds it hovered perfectly still then

MARCH MEETING - PROGRAM PLANS

by Spence Wolling

The UFO Study Group of Greater St. Louis will meet on Sunday, March 13, 1994 at 2:30 p.m. at the Shoney's Restaurant at 7468 Manchester Rd. just east of Big Bend Blvd. The meeting is held in a separate room to the right rear of the dining area behind the salad bar.

The meeting will start with the usual exchange of new UFO information from the attendees. All information is welcome as are any questions that our well read members may be able to answer or provide references for research.

The scheduled program will be a video film from the First Annual Gulf Breeze UFO Conference which was held Nov. 4-6, 1993. This was a very good gathering and featured many well-known speakers. Our film presents a speaker who is new on the UFO convention circuit, but who was an impressive speaker and even got an encore in a sense. He was not able to show his collection of slides about UFO sightings during the first speech period. They arranged a second session for him and those who could attend.

The introductory paper provided us with the following data:
"ROBERT DEAN, Retired Army Command, Sergeant Major.

extinguished itself from the outside into the center. Two days later, they canoed to the Smithbrook Campground (the most remote spot on the lake) and found it completely deserted. Hoping to replenish their food supply, they fished all day with little or no luck. As a result they decided to do some night fishing. Using large logs, they built a very large fire. In fact, Jim was worried that they might start a forest fire. However, it was an extremely dark night and they knew that they'd need to be able to count on the light of the campfire to find their way back to camp after fishing.

Filing into the canoe, Charlie Foltz sat in the front with his paddles, while the twins (Jim and Jack Weiner) sat side by side in the middle, using their hands to paddle. Chuck Rak sat in the back with his paddles. They were about a quarter mile from shore, halfway across the cove when it began. Chuck was the first to sense it when he became aware of a feeling of being watched, and turning around he saw a large, bright sphere of colored light hovering motionless and soundless about 200-300 feet above the southeastern rim of the cove. He realized he was the only one in position to see this from his vantage point in the rear of the canoe so he drew attention of the others to the object by exclaiming, "That's a hell of a case of swamp gas!". In the front of the canoe, Charlie stopped paddling and looked around. By now all eyes were fixed on the object.

From Jack's perspective sitting next to his twin in the middle of the canoe, he described the object as a bright, pulsing, spherical light, with changing patterns in it that reminded him of science experiments that use a magnet and metal filings to illustrate a magnetic field. He described it as being big as a house, at least 80 feet in diameter, and absolutely silent.

Jim's impression was that the object appeared solid, had no observable protrusions or windows, and was approximately the size of a two-story house in circumference. The light was extremely bright, like a miniature sun. He came up with the idea of signaling it with their flashlight.

Charlie said that at first he thought it was the moon rising over the trees, but soon realized it wasn't the moon because the light moved along the shoreline about 15 to 20 feet above the trees. He signaled it with his large flashlight ... three short, three long, and three short flashes. At the last blink of the flashlight, the thing came to an abrupt halt and then began to slowly approach the canoe.

Karr indicates that from this point on the conscious memories of the four men differ from one another. Charlie's next memory is of their paddling for shore and standing at the campsite with the others watching the object move away. Chuck remembers remaining in the canoe after the others piled out onto the shore in panic. He stood there transfixed, paddle in hand, unable to take his eyes from the object.

Jack and Jim Weiner were able to consciously remember more about the object, including the abnormal light beam that came out of the object. They all seemed to be in a state of suspended animation as they watched the object leave the area.

As they sat around the camp table, feeling very tired and somehow strange, they became aware that the large camp fire they had lit 15 to 20 minutes before had completely burned down into glowing red coals. Being extremely exhausted, the four of them fell asleep right at the table. On awakening the next morning, they broke camp and continued on their journey. They flagged down a passing forest ranger and reported their UFO experience.

Although in the past they had faithfully kept trip notes and diaries, after their experience on the Allagash little more was written. This experience would remain a puzzle for years until Jim and Jack began to experience strange dreams and paranormal phenomena, which finally led Jim to the author, Ray Fowler.

Karr reports that in 1986, Jack started having recurring dreams where he was standing against a wall or an upright table in a place filled with a bright hazy light. He is fully awake and thinking but unable to move. He is aware of Jim, Chuck and Charlie sitting on a bench to his left, and remembers thinking "why don't you guys do something", but they, like him, cannot speak or move.

After his physician encouraged him to undergo hypnotic regression, Jim contacted a local MUFON consultant. Charlie, Chuck and Jack were asked by Ray Fowler to seriously consider undergoing hypnotic regression also. They decided to see first how Jim would react to it. As the date drew near for Jim's regression, Fowler enlisted the help of David Webb who was one of the principal investigators of the Andreasson Affair. Webb, a solar physicist, is an expert on close encounters of the third kind (CEIII) as well as CEIV cases. MUFON consultant Tony Constantino was chosen to conduct the hypnotic regression sessions. Webb and Constantino were familiar with the experiences in Fowler's book, The Watchers.

Jim, Jack, Chuck and Charlie were regressed separately and told not to share with each other what came out of their individual sessions. Also Mary (who had earlier CEIV experiences) was not to share her experiences with her husband Jim, nor was he to share his with her.

During their individual hypnotic regressions, each reported similar experiences on the UFO, including being led to a hazy room filled with extremely bright light. Each recalled sitting on a bench up against a wall, and that when it was their turn each was asked by the aliens (telepathically) to stand up, remove their clothes and walk to table which was directly in front of the others who were still sitting on the bench waiting their turn. While being escorted to the table the men felt they were floating rather than walking. The procedures of the exam seemed to follow a pattern for the four in at least five of the following typical procedures:

- 1) Preparation - The beings make the witness ready for the exam.
- 2) Manual Exam - The beings touch or manipulate various parts of the body by hand or by using hand-held instruments.
- 3) Scanning - The body is scanned by an eye-like instrument.
- 4) Instrumental Exam - Unusual looking instruments probe the body.
- 5) Samples - The beings take samples of blood or other body materials.
- 6) Reproductive Exam - Test are concerned with reproductive or genital organs.
- 7) Neurological Exam - Attention is given to the head, brain and nervous system as the beings explore the mind, brain and nerves of the witness.
- 8) Behavioral Exam - The beings test and observe behavior and telepathically ask questions of the witness.

THE RETURN: The abduction experience ends with the abductees being brought back to familiar surroundings and the normal activities that they were doing before the abduction, seemingly not having been interrupted. In the case of the Allagash 4, as Charlie said: "They helped us into the canoe ... and said we were okay and that there was nothing to be afraid of and to go back to our place ... not to remember ... don't be troubled."

(Secretary's note: Those charming words of advice from someone who has just invaded your body and messed with your mind are easier said than done. It would be nice if the shoe were on the other foot for a change. One of these days ...)

PARAPSYCHOLOGY AND THE PHYSICS OF TIME/SPACE TRAVEL

by John E. Schroeder

The Parapsychology Committee met February 20 at Schroeder's home, 4991 Miami St. Dr. Brion was too ill to present his program on a purported plot which took a Pope's life. Warren Bartling introduced the sharing section with the tabloid story of a pilot from World War III in 2036, who supposedly landed in Florida in December 1993. The day's discussion then focused on time travel in fiction, in space exploration and in UFO reports.

Walter Palmer cited several examples demonstrating the potential (supported by quantum physics theory) of traveling into the future through speed approaching that of light. Clarence Barnes affirmed the dual paths for time travel: parapsychology (pre and post-cognition) and physical translation (spatial and temporal). Walter countered with the scientific concept that travel into the past is much more difficult than moving ahead.

John Schroeder quoted Scientific American, March 1994, page 68, "The Quantum Physics of Time Travel." Authors David Deutsch and Michael Lockwood state, "Physicists have traditionally invoked a chronology principle that, by fiat, rules out travel into the past ... traveling into the past would not violate any such principle ... In Einstein's special and general theories of relativity, three dimensional space is combined with time to form four dimensional space-time."

Wanda Beard quoted a UFO abductee who described this. "Space time is a slinky going down stairs." (Space gaps allow possible time warps.)

Deutsch and Lockwood expanded their theory with an illustration. "Your life forms a kind of four dimensional 'worm' in space time: the tip of the worm's tail corresponds to the event of your birth, and the front of its head to the event of your death." They suggest anomalies such as time loops, time curves with interlocking separately decaying world lines, and multiverses which - through neutron deterioration - open "worm holes" in space-time fabric revealing parallel universes.

The Parapsychology Committee members decided that the topic of "Time Travel" deserved further discussion at their next meeting, 2:30 p.m., April 24 at Schroeder's home. (The March meeting has been cancelled because it falls on Palm Sunday when church and family activities are scheduled.) If Dr. Pacelli Brion is able to attend, he will show the postponed video. Clarence Barnes will also reintroduce the "Time Travel" motif, reporting on one theory of UFO travel, Visitors from Time by Marc Davenport, Wildflower Press, Tigard, OR 97281. All are invited to attend and to join the discussions.

He tells about this report and then tells about his 30 year personal study, and his opinion of what the UFO phenomenon is all about. His conclusions are worth a lot of consideration and much thought. It is well worth your time to attend this meeting.

Moviemakers wrap up "Roswell"

condensed from the Daily Record, Roswell, NM
December 20, 1993

Nancy Fleming, Staff Writer

A mystery which began in 1947 on a typical New Mexico ranch, with rolling hills and dotted with sheep, starts to unfold 30 years later when a group of military men assemble for a reunion in Roswell.

Their discussions center on the crash of a flying object near Corona and the movie capturing the dramatization of these events is called "Roswell," a film for Showtime Networks, Inc., and based on the book "UFO Crash at Roswell" by Kevin D. Randle and Donald R. Schmitt.

The billings for the movie go to Kyle MacLachlan, Kim Greist, Dwight Yoakam and Martin Sheen.

MacLachlan ("Twin Peaks") stars as Colonel Jesse Marcel, the Roswell Army Air Force Base intelligence officer who investigated the crash. Greist is Marcel's wife Vy.

Dwight Yoakam takes on the role of Mac Brazel, the ranch hand who finds the strange debris from the crash, and Martin Sheen ("Apocalypse Now") is Townsend - a kind of "deep throat" character (as in "All the President's Men").

Townshend, explained Executive Producer Paul Davids, is a person who "comes into the scene bringing fresh information that makes what happened at Roswell seem like it may have been the tip of an iceberg, of something much deeper that has gone on for a long time."

"I want to emphasize that it's not a UFO movie that we've made here ... this is not a science-fiction movie, it doesn't have that style," Davids said.

"We've made a human military drama, a drama about a town, a community, a military base and what happened to the people that were involved in this incident through the years and how it changed their lives."

Mac Brazel (played by Dwight Yoakam), left; Jesse Marcel (Kyle MacLachlan), right; and Sherman Carson (Xander Berkeley), rear, overlook a flying object crash site on the set of

"Roswell." The actors wrapped up 28 days of filming on location in Bisbee, Ariz., and in Los Angeles at midnight Wednesday. (12-15-93)

Davids knows this first hand as he reported an unidentified flying object sighting near Pasadena, CA. This was the impetus which led to his involvement with investigators Randle and Schmitt, and eventually to his obtaining the rights to produce a feature film on their research.

"A lot of people worked on this movie because they have a really strong conviction that the truth about (the Roswell Incident) should come out," Davids said, adding that the drama comes from four questions:

"What was the story that led to (the military) announcing that they had a flying saucer ... what led to them denying that they had one ... why did so many military people who were involved keep their silence on this for the better part of their lives ... and why did so many begin to speak out (later)?"

In order to capture the impact the 1947 Roswell Incident had on the people involved, the movie deals with the characters in two time periods - first in 1947 at the time of the crash, then 30 years later at the reunion.

(Editor's Note - This movie, "Roswell," will premier on the Showtime cable channel sometime between May and July of this year. Watch for it- and here's hoping it triggers some serious discussion about UFO's and coverups in the "mainstream" media.)
